This food festival is set to attract thousands of foodies from across India in the next five days. It will have master street food vendors from different regions of India with their signature dishes.

In addition to this, the Festival will exhibit 4 divisions representing four provinces of India- North, South, East and West with street foods and delicacies arranged in consonance with its origins.

“Organizing street food festivals is a major component of NASVI led street food advocacy movement as it symbolizes the promotion of the street vendors in our society-gives them the visibility and the voice.” said Arbind Singh, National Coordinator of NASVI.

Ahead of the festival, NASVI and FSSAI are giving health and hygiene training to the vendors through a certified FOSTAC trainer.
